Math

Focus: I can add and subtract decimals to hundredths using models, drawings or other strategies to explain my thinking.

Example:

The key is to always line up the decimal points before we add or subtract.

$$\begin{array}{r} 1234.56 \\ +7890.12 \\ \hline 9124.68 \end{array}$$

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KG6ILNOiMgM> Watch this video for more information about understanding Decimals and Place Value for fractions. Also you can look up this video by Math Antics: Decimal Place Value.

Language Arts

Focus: I can accurately quote from a fiction or nonfiction text when I am explaining what it says and support inferences that I have made.

Example: Finding an inference is similar to being a detective. Readers will look for clues in what the characters say or do. It is important to take the clues from the text and use our background knowledge to figure out what is being implied.

This is our standard for September and October. Please continue to look for clues at home while watching media, movies or conversations when you make inferences. Be a detective!
